

Ken Ingram

MSc

Head of practice

Ken has been a learning and development consultant and facilitator for more than 25 years.

Ken is responsible for Roffey Park's blended learning strategy and has much experience of developing and implementing online learning solutions. In Civil Service Learning he set up and ran a learning portal for over 500,000 learners throughout the public sector.

Before joining Roffey Park, Ken worked for a number of organisations in a learning and development capacity including the National school of Government, Centre for Management and Policy studies and Civil Service Learning.

As a consultant, Ken has broad expertise across a wide range of fields. In particular, he majors in leadership and management development, HR, facilitations skills, adult learning and evaluation. He has many years of experience of working on strategic consultancy projects in organisations both in the UK and overseas. He has led a number of international projects including in Ukraine, Russia, Bulgaria, Romania, Italy, Kosovo, Hungary, Czech Republic Austria and Germany.

Ken has passion for blended and adult learning and has focused much of his career on helping individuals and organisations to develop their learning design and facilitation capability.

Ken has an MSc in Training and Human resources. He has a keen interest in the application of learning and his master's dissertation focused on organisational evaluation of training in the public sector.
